

Graphic Organizer: English III: Module 3: Lesson 2: Section 4:

Organizer the Structure of the Paper: Putting It All Together

Instructions: Copy statements from the Sentence Box and paste them into the boxes in the Outline Form. Fill in the reasons that would support the thesis, the explanation of those reasons, the examples of the reasons, and an objection plus a restatement of that objection.

Sentence Box

For example, someone may have a prejudice that . . .

The final reason that I think travel is a powerful way to overcome intolerance is that by putting us in unfamiliar situations, it expands our imagination about what is possible and permissible.

Another, example of a disproven prejudice is . . .

Or another example of how imagination of possibilities is expanded by travel is . . .

But movies, Internet, television, and books fall short of having the impact on us that travel does because . . .

In other words, we are forced, if we talk at all, to talk with people whose views are . . .

Another way that travel makes us more tolerant is that it encourages us to listen to the views of other people.

Some people say that reading, watching good programs on television, using the Internet, and even watching movies can have the same effect of making us more tolerant. Their point is that . . .

What I mean by this is that prejudices aren't corrected unless they are. . .

The first reason that I think travel makes us more tolerant is that it gives us evidence to disprove our prejudices.

Another example comes from my personal experience. Once as I traveled, I had the opportunity to talk with someone whose views were . . .

For example, someone who is traveling will talk with people from different cultures . . .

For example, a person who grows up in a farming community may know about but not be able to really imagine . . .

Put another way, people who stay in the same place will have less evidence to feed their imagination about possibilities.

Outline Form

● Introduction

● Body

○ Reason 1:

■ Restatement 1:

■ Example 1.1:

■ Example 1.2:

○ Reason 2:

■ Restatement 2:

■ Example 2.1:

■ Example 2.2:

○ Reason 3:

■ Restatement 3:

■ Example 3.1:

■ Example 3.2:

○ Objection:

■ Answer to Objection:

● Conclusion

Click for the correct responses

● Introduction

● Body

- Reason 1: The first reason that I think travel makes us more tolerant is that it gives us evidence to disprove our prejudices.

■ Restatement 1: What I mean by this is that prejudices aren't corrected unless they are. . .

■ Example 1.1: For example, someone may have a prejudice that . . .

■ Example 1.2: Another, example of a disproven prejudice is . . .

- Reason 2: Another way that travel makes us more tolerant is that it encourages us to listen to the views of other people.

■ Restatement 2: In other words, we are forced, if we talk at all, to talk with people whose views are . . .

■ Example 2.1: For example, someone who is traveling will talk with people from different cultures . . .

■ Example 2.2: Another example comes from my personal experience. Once as I traveled, I had the opportunity to talk with someone whose views were . . .

- Reason 3: The final reason that I think travel is a powerful way to overcome intolerance is that by putting us in unfamiliar situations, it expands our imagination about what is possible and permissible.

■ Restatement 3: Put another way, people who stay in the same place will have less evidence to feed their imagination about possibilities.

■ Example 3.1: For example, a person who grows up in a farming community may know about but not be able to really imagine . . .

■ Example 3.2: Or another example of how imagination of possibilities is expanded by travel is . . .

- Objection: Some people say that reading, watching good programs on television, using the Internet, and even watching movies can have the same effect of making us more tolerant. Their point is that . . .

■ Answer to Objection: But movies, Internet, television, and books fall short of having the impact on us that travel does because . . .

● Conclusion